COUNCIL BLUFFS, Iowa -- The owner of the Iowa Blackhawks indoor football team is hoping the Web will help him sell his team.

Owner Jake Hiffernan called the deal a steal.

For $195,000, the buyer gets the home field Astroturf, the football player uniforms, the 2009 American Professional Football League Regional Championship trophy and $30,000 worth of nutritional supplements.

"They would get the naming rights, team rights -- everything that goes with it," Hiffernan said.

He has owned the team since 2003. He wants to sell it so the franchise can grow and profit.

Hiffernan said he hasn't had the resources to do that for the team.

"We need to get somebody in here with some real money so we can start getting a bigger fan base and be a bigger part of our community," he said.

KETV NewsWatch 7 found the listing on BizBuySell.com.

Officials at the listing agency, The Veld Company, said this is a first for them.

Said Hiffernan, "This just gives us another avenue of finding another potential investor that could come out of the woodwork. You never know who might pop up."

Those who have popped up so far expressing interest are former NFL players. Hiffernan declined to name the players.

Hiffernan just signed a three-year deal to play at the mid America Center in Council Bluffs. So the team will play even if it doesn't sell.
